Osmosis & Diffusion

Cell Membrane

Each animal cell membrane is composed of phospholipids and sugar-coated proteins. It is made up of two layers of phospholipids. Each phospholipid consists of two fatty acid tails and a phosphate head. The cell membrane is known as a semipermeable membrane because it only allows substances to move in and out of the cell.

Diffusion

Small molecules move across cell membranes through a natural ability called diffusion. Diffusion happens by which a substance moves from a place of high concentration to a place of low concentration. Temperature controls and the solubility of the substance determine whether it diffuses.

Osmosis

Osmosis is the diffusion of water across a semipermeable membrane. The amount of water that moves depends on the concentration.

Active Transport
The transport of molecules across the cell membrane from a low concentration to a high concentration through a pump. The transport of molecules through a cell membrane using energy is called active transport.

Passive Transport
The transport of molecules across the cell membrane from a high concentration to a low concentration without the use of energy is called passive transport.
