Indirect Tax regime .

An indirect tax regime refers to a tax system where taxes are collected indirectly from consumers through the sale of goods and services. In other words, the tax is not paid directly by the person who bears the ultimate economic burden of the tax, but rather by an intermediary, such as a seller, who then passes on the tax to the consumer as part of the purchase price.

Indirect taxes are typically levied on the production, sale, or consumption of goods and services. Examples of indirect taxes include value-added tax (VAT), sales tax, excise tax, customs duties, and tariffs. These taxes are usually collected by the government through the businesses that sell or produce the goods and services, and are then passed on to the consumers.

Indirect tax regimes are commonly used by governments as a way to generate revenue without placing a direct burden on individuals or businesses. However, the impact of these taxes can still be felt by consumers through increased prices of goods and services, which can have a regressive effect on low-income households.

Goods and Service Tax (GST).

Goods and Services Tax (GST) is an indirect tax that is levied on the supply of goods and services in a country. It is a comprehensive tax system that replaces all the indirect taxes levied by the central and state governments in India, including Value Added Tax (VAT), Central Excise Duty, and Service Tax.

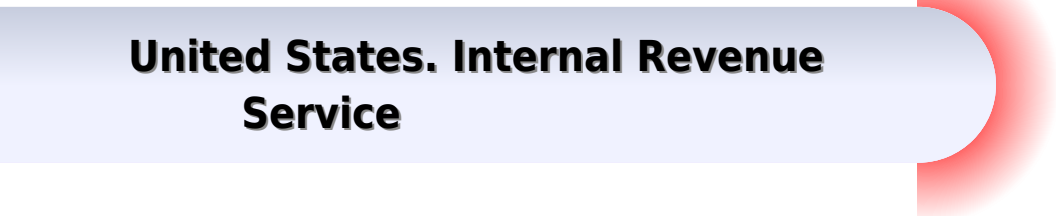

GST was introduced in India on July 1, 2017, and it is governed by the Goods and Services Tax Act. Under GST, all businesses and traders are required to register and obtain a unique GST identification number (GSTIN). They are also required to file regular returns and pay the tax to the government.

The GST system is divided into three categories: Central GST (CGST), State GST (SGST), and Integrated GST (IGST). The CGST and SGST are levied by the central and state governments, respectively, on intra-state transactions, while IGST is levied on inter-state transactions.

GST has simplified the tax structure in India and made it easier for businesses to comply with the tax laws. It has also helped to remove the cascading effect of taxes, which occurs when a tax is charged on a tax, resulting in higher prices for goods and services. Additionally, GST has helped to increase tax revenue for the government, which can be used for various development projects.
