

What is happening when acceleration due to gravity is less than 10 m/s^2 ?

Air resistance depends on size and speed of the falling object. Objects accelerate until the air resistance (F_r) is equal and opposite to the weight (F_g) of the object. At that point the net force acting on the object is zero. Acceleration will stop and the object will fall with a constant velocity.

Explain the concept of terminal velocity?

Terminal velocity occurs when the net force is zero and acceleration stops. For a feather it is only a few cm/s and for a skydiver it is about 200 km/hr.

The skinny skydiver has a lower mass so he will have a lower value for F_g .

F_g will equal F_r quicker for the skinny skydiver. The skinny skydiver will reach terminal velocity first. The heavy skydiver will land first.

NEWTON'S 3rd LAW OF MOTION

State Newton's 3rd Law of Motion.

Whenever one object exerts a force on a second object, the second object exerts an equal and opposite force on the first. There are two forces at work. Neither can exist without the other. They are always equal in magnitude and opposite in direction.
