Quality Assurance Handbook for Veterinary Laboratories James E. C. Bellamy, Dennis W. Olexson, 2000-10-27 Every veterinary laboratory whether it is a full service commercial or institutional facility or a practitioner's office laboratory can benefit from a quality assurance program. A laboratory quality assurance program has one overall objective to provide confidence in the validity of the laboratory's test results and services. In turn, the laboratory's customers will have increased satisfaction with the quality of veterinary health care. This volume will outline the general components of quality assurance and will allow for customisation of procedures by individual laboratories. Sections will discuss quality goals and policies, quality of resources, evaluating new procedures, quality of operations, and quality considerations for point of care testing and office laboratories.
