This paper summarizes a conference held at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development on December 6-7, 1999, on self-injurious behavior [SIB] in developmental disabilities. Twenty-six of the top researchers in the U.S. from this field representing 13 different disciplines discussed environmental mechanisms, epidemiology, behavioral and pharmacological intervention strategies, neurochemical substrates, genetic syndromes in which SIB is a prominent behavioral phenotype, neurobiological and neurodevelopmental factors affecting SIB in humans as well as a variety of animal models of SIB. Findings over the last decade, especially new discoveries since 1995, were emphasized. SIB is a rapidly growing area of scientific interest to both basic and applied researchers. In many respects it is a model for the study of gene-brain-behavior relationships in developmental disabilities.

Key Words: self-injurious behavior; SIB; gene-brain-behavior relationship

Self-injurious behavior [SIB] refers to acts directed toward one's self that result in tissue damage [Tate and Baroff, 1966]. SIB by people with intellectual and other developmental disabilities has puzzled clinicians, educators and researchers over the past century [Thompson, 1999]. As many as 5%-17% of all people with intellectual and developmental disabilities engage in repetitive SIB, some very frequently [Rojahn, 1994; Colacott et al., 1998; Schroeder et al., 1999]. Compulsive SIB by people with intellectual and other developmental disabilities appears to be qualitatively different from episodic SIB by people of typical intellectual ability and with such mental disorders as

Self-injurious Behavior Stephen R. Schroeder, Mary Lou Oster-Granite, Travis Thompson, 2002-01-01 A comprehensive interdisciplinary review of the research on etiology and treatment of this chronic condition for which there is no known apparent cure With an estimated prevalence rate of 13 per cent SIB occurs most frequently among persons who are retarded and autistic In this volume the field s leading researchers examine a new generation of models and theories with a level of specificity far beyond what was heretofore imagined possible From the burgeoning area of research on functional assessment and the behavioural and biological antecedents of SIB to the role of Lesch Nyhan Syndrome and opioid peptides the work of these foremost basic applied and behavioural researchers is sure to greatly enhance fellow researchers teachers and clinicians understanding of this devastating condition

Self-Injurious Behavior in Intellectual Disabilities Johannes Rojahn, Stephen R. Schroeder, Theodore A Hoch, 2007-11-02 Self Injurious Behavior in Intellectual Disabilities gives a broad overview of the literature in the area of self injurious behavior in people with intellectual disabilities but most of the text is dedicated to the review of the behavioral and biological research in this field In fact it is our view that the most promising heuristic approach for the advancement of our understanding of this phenomenon and for its management and treatment is likely the bio behavioral perspective in which behavior can be studied at the intersect of learning and the biological bases of behavior We propose an overarching heuristic model which we call the Gene Brain Behavior Model of Self Injurious Behavior that presents a platform to integrate disparate and previously isolated scientific approaches Written by 3 authors to provide cohesive coverage Bridges the gap between psychological behavior and psychiatry Examines the overlap between intellectual disabilities and developmental disabilities Gedraganalyse en -therapie bij mensen met een verstandelijke beperking
