

The Immune System

The immune system is a very complex system. Here, we review only those aspects that are relevant to this case.

B cells (sometimes called B lymphocytes, plasma cells, plasma B cells, plasmocytes, or effector B cells) are white blood cells involved in neutralizing a virus or bacteria that have not yet infected a cell and are "free floating" in the body (this is called the humoral immune response). B cells secrete a protein called an antibody into the circulatory system. Each antibody binds to a particular virus or bacteria very specifically and strongly. When antibodies bind to a virus or to bacteria, the foreign object is inactivated. Therefore, when B cells secrete antibodies, they "take out" free-floating foreign invaders.

Cytotoxic T cells (sometimes called killer T cells, or  $T_c$  or  $T_{cyt}$ , or cytotoxic T lymphocytes [CTL] or CD8) recognize human cells that have already been infected by a foreign virus or bacteria (this is called the cellular immune response). Their job is to kill these infected cells. So while B cells remove free floating virus particles,  $T_c$  cells remove virus particles that have already made their way inside human cells by killing the infected cells. On their cell surface is a protein called CD8, which is why they are sometimes called CD8+ cells.

T Helper cells (sometimes called  $T_H$  or CD4+ cells) do not directly interact with foreign bodies. They are the "organizing centers" of the immune system, coordinating the action of cytotoxic T cells and B cells. Without them,  $T_c$  and B cells do not work effectively. On their cell surface is the protein CD4, which is why these cells are sometimes called CD4+ cells.
