

Biology - 4.2 Niches and Community Interactions

I. The Niche A niche is the range of physical and biological conditions in which a species lives and the way the species obtains what it needs to survive and reproduce.

A. Tolerance

- a. Every species has its own range of tolerance, the ability to survive and reproduce under a range of environmental circumstances.

- b. Organisms have an upper and lower limit of tolerance for every environmental factor. Beyond those limits, the organism cannot survive.
- c. A species' tolerance for environmental conditions, then, helps determine its habitat—the general place where an organism lives.

B. Defining the Niche

- a. An organism's niche describes not only the environment where it lives, but how it interacts with biotic and abiotic factors in the environment.
- b. The term resource is any necessity needed for survival.
- i. Physical Aspects of the Niche - Part of an organism's niche involves the abiotic factors it requires for survival; (water, weather, etc)
 - ii. Biological Aspects of the Niche - Biological aspects of an organism's niche involve the biotic factors it requires for survival, such as when and how it reproduces, the food it eats, and the way in which it obtains that food.

II. Competition - How does competition shape communities?

By causing species to divide resources, competition helps determine the number and kinds of species in a community and the niche each species occupies.

A. The Competitive Exclusion Principle

- a. Direct competition between different species almost always produces a winner and a loser—and the losing species dies out.
- b. The competitive exclusion principle states that no two species can occupy exactly the same niche in exactly the same habitat at exactly the same time.
- c. If two species attempt to occupy the same niche, one species will be better at competing for limited resources and will eventually exclude the other species.

B. Dividing Resources
