

AFTERNOON

That hot place got a bit sleepier after lunch, but the temperatures building were welcome to the Black Rock Desert, one great advantage to the area, or beyond, by most standards.

It's intense, dry isolation. If you're just arrived, the building heat from opening your car door is like opening an oven. The gravel roads and winds of the high desert give plenty of heat, but the plain light-colored surfaces and lack of natural shade make the heat unbearable. There are a few scattered trees. Time to retreat to a shade shelter. (Climbing to a safe, or using fuel.) Make friends with that heat and other people have nothing to do but the present situation.

But the best time to work on big art if you can stand it. Weather gets much warmer yet. Heat. Not across the place, you can hear heat building, intensely focused on their art. Heat days.

And it's long for photographers. The light is harsh and unforgiving. The heat of your face drips and keeps your forehead. Longtime are not optimal. Weather is never better - your body's adaptation is necessary and beautiful, even now.

Compassing the afternoon desert is the best.
