These results have important implications for the existing research on the relationship between the level of the country's economic development and the level of corruption. The results suggest that the relationship between the two variables is not linear, but rather, it is U-shaped. This means that the level of corruption is low in the early stages of economic development, but it increases as the country's economic development progresses. This finding is important because it suggests that the level of corruption is not simply a function of the country's economic development, but it is also a function of the country's institutional environment. The results suggest that the level of corruption is low in the early stages of economic development because the institutional environment is weak, but it increases as the country's economic development progresses because the institutional environment becomes stronger.

These results suggest that the use of the proposed model can be a useful tool for the analysis of the effects of the different parameters on the system response. The model can be used to study the effects of the different parameters on the system response, and to optimize the system parameters for a given set of operating conditions.
