Makhholm, 2012-04-15 With global demand for energy poised to increase by more than half in the next three decades the supply of safe reliable and reasonably priced gas and oil will continue to be of fundamental importance to modern economies Central to this supply are the pipelines that transport this energy And while the fundamental economics of the major pipeline networks are the same the differences in their ownership commercial development and operation can provide insight into the workings of market institutions in various nations Drawing on a century of the world s experience with gas and oil pipelines this book illustrates the importance of economics in explaining the evolution of pipeline politics in various countries It demonstrates that institutional differences influence ownership and regulation while rents and consumer pricing depend on the size and diversity of existing markets the depth of regulatory institutions and the historical structure of the pipeline businesses themselves The history of pipelines is also rife with social conflict and Makhholm explains how and when institutions in a variety of countries have controlled pipeline behavior either through economic regulation or government ownership in the public interest Energy Poverty and Access Challenges in Sub-Saharan Africa Victoria R. Nalule, 2018-08-27 Access to modern energy is central in addressing the major global challenges of the 21st century including poverty climate change and famine However large parts of the world especially in Sub Saharan Africa SSA have poor or no access to modern energy Victoria Nalule argues that SSA countries have many common energy challenges which could be tackled with collective efforts through regional cooperation By means of a legal and comparative analysis and a seven step framework the book explores the current regional mechanisms employed in Africa to address the challenge of energy poverty and access and whether they are effective in tackling the challenge of energy access including regional energy infrastructure and regional energy regulations Chapters discuss the evolution of regionalism in SSA and the role of regional cooperation in the development of renewable energy as a means of confronting both energy access and climate change Specifically the nexus between energy access renewable energy and climate change is covered as well as the potential of fossil fuels in addressing energy poverty The establishment and development of regional energy infrastructure as one of the mechanisms of addressing energy access challenges in SSA and regional efforts to harmonise energy regulation are explored Finally a concluding chapter provides recommendations for policy makers and other relevant stakeholders on how best to implement some of the suggestions made in previous chapters International organisations regional organisations government officials scholars and students with interest in the energy sector will highly benefit from this book
