Essentials of development over human lifespan including physical, cognitive, social and personal development through stages and more

FOUNDATIONS OF DEVELOPMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY THROUGHOUT THE LIFE SPAN

THE THEMATIC COMPONENTS OF HUMAN DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH

- Cross-Sectional and Longitudinal Studies: The same individuals are studied over a prolonged interval (longitudinal) or many individuals are studied over discrete intervals (cross-sectional).
- Quantitative and Qualitative Development: may be incremental and hence quantifiable (e.g., height, weight, and bone mass) or qualitative (e.g., puberty or menopause).
- Genetic and Environmental: The interplay between genetic and environmental factors is a complex one, expressed in different interactive ratios for different developmental modalities.
- Cultural Developmental Influences: can be context-dependent; for instance, family, community, culture and historical epoch. (That is to say, psychosocial factors may play a more dominant role in personality development in a particular culture than in a liberal/collective culture.)
- Cumulative Effect: Many developmental influences are best understood as the outcome of a cumulative developmental process.
- Maturation/Dysmatur: Due to recent changes in the longevity of populations, better health and earlier development, the actual rate and stage of developmental thresholds need to be recognized as being a dynamic continuum. For instance, contemporary adolescents are maturing sexually much earlier than their great-grandparents did, and due to increased longevity and better general health, adults in their 60s are far more active and energetic than adults of the same age a century ago.
- Ethical Considerate: The experimental and scientific validity of most theories of development cannot be clearly established due to ethical constraints; for instance, it would be greatly unethical to subject randomly assigned groups of newborn infants to emotionally abusive, or emotionally sterile, treatment as a means of assessing precisely how such factors negatively impact on personality development.

THEORIES OF DEVELOPMENT

- Psychoanalytic: Emphasizes the role of subconscious factors in personality development; Sigmund Freud, Carl Jung, Alfred Adler and Karen Horney are representative of this tradition.
- Psychoanalytic: A subset of psychoanalytic approaches, wherein sexual and aggressive components are thought to be the main contributors to development; Sigmund Freud and Wilhelm Reich are representative of this outlook.

- Psychoecological: Characterized by the view that development is the outcome of biological, psychological and societal interactions; Erik Erikson is representative of this theory.
- Cognitive: Focus is upon stages of cognitive development, frequently viewed as sequential, linear processes; Jean Piaget is representative of this tradition.
- Information-Processing: A recent approach influenced by the models suggested by research in artificial intelligence and cognitive science; emphasis is upon attention, perception, memory and problem solving at various stages of development; Donald Broadbent's book, Attention and Communication, published in 1958, laid the foundation for this theory.
- Systems Theory: Takes the position that humans cannot be fully understood in isolation of the relationships that they form with family, community and culture. The operational understanding of the whole is greater than the sum of its parts taken in isolation. The work of Roger Barker, Gregory Bateson and Umberto Marzano is representative of this tradition.
- Sociobiological: This is an evolutionary approach to the process of human behavioral development, in that behavior is seen as the outcome of the process of natural selection and survival capacities afforded by various coping strategies; John Paul Smith and Edward O. Wilson are representative of this tradition.
- Cultural Belief: Views culture as the primary determinant guiding development; for instance, cultural traditions of the responsibilities and roles of parents and children play a crucial role in defining developmental milestones; Richard Shweder is representative of this tradition.
- Social Belief: Takes the view that the development of personality is best understood in the context of the social roles a person participates in; for instance, worker, parent, volunteer, authority figure, and so on; Erving Goffman and Kenneth Burke are representative of this tradition.
- Behavioral: Outlook primarily based upon the tenets of operant conditioning theory, but also supplemented with aspects of cognitive behaviorism, as the basis for explaining personality development; John B. Watson is representative of this tradition.
- Ecological: Posits that an individual participates in different levels of environmental contexts, where some contexts are more influential than others, but all influencing the individual's development; Erik Erikson is representative of this tradition.

GENETIC INFLUENCE

The role of genetic factors in determinants of physical and personality traits is variable, due to a complex interaction between genetic predispositions and environmental variables. Some traits may be completely genetically predetermined, such as eye color, whereas others are only marginally genetically determined, such as height or weight.

INFANCY & TODDLERHOOD (AGE 0-3 YEARS)

PHYSICAL & COGNITIVE DEVELOPMENT

PHYSICAL DEVELOPMENT

- Sensory, motor and perceptual functions: Initial sensory capabilities (color discrimination, facial recognition, depth perception, touch/smell) are limited but develop quickly.

COGNITIVE DEVELOPMENT

- Sensorimotor intelligence: verification of causal influences, object categorization, linguistic development and fantasy play.
- Jean Piaget: was the first to systematically investigate cognitive development and identified several distinct stages.

SOCIAL & PERSONALITY DEVELOPMENT

- Trust vs. Mistrust: If child's needs are adequately met, a sense of trust is developed; if not, mistrust may develop.
- Attachment: May be secure, avoidant, ambivalent, disorganized/disoriented. There is a complex interaction between parental and child attachment status, and a child's attachment status has long-term consequences including into adulthood.
 - Separation Anxiety: Most pronounced between 12 and 18 months.
- THE DEVELOPMENT OF LANGUAGE & COMMUNICATION SKILLS
 - Initial communication: by infants is by means of facial gestures, crying and gurgling.
 - Vocalization of sounds: begins around 3 months; vocabulary expands rapidly around 18 months.
 - The eloquence and sophistication of parents' linguistic expression greatly affects the child's language abilities.

COGNITIVE DEVELOPMENT STAGES

Stage	Starting at Age	Ability	Example
Reflexes	Birth	Reflex reaction	Crawling
Early Habits	2 weeks	Utilize reflexes	Grasp only
Concrete Reactions	4 months	Use learned actions to achieve limited goals	Grasp blanket and pull to self
Means-Ends Incorporation	8 months	Directive use of actions to achieve new goals	Cover face with blanket to play
Experimentation	11 months	Action modification to reach new goals	Use rattle to bang it down
Self-Recognition	15-24 months	Recognize self's reflection in mirror	"Rouge-test"
Imagery	18 months	Cognitive recombination	Hide rattle inside blanket
Object Permanence*	18 months	Recognize that objects may exist even when no longer perceived	If rattle is hidden, nonchalant; it still exists

* Object permanence is related to the development of handling with the cognitive domain. If the mother knows the rules, infants do not discern, in their perception that the mother will "exist" even when she is momentarily not perceived.
