algorithms like photon mapping or final gather. Such algorithms attempt to cache data that can be re-sampled later to speed up rendering. However, in doing so, they use up large amounts of memory, introduce bias into the sampling that cause visual artifacts. They also require artists to understand the details of how these algorithms work in order to correctly choose various control settings in order to get any speed up at all without ruining the render. Worse than that, these settings are almost always affected by other things in the scene so it's often possible to accidentally use settings for the cache creation that make things worse, not better, or that work fine in one situation but are terrible in another, seemingly similar situation. In short, they are not predictable other than for very experienced users and require artists to learn way too much about the algorithms in order to gain any benefit. At Solid Angle, we believe that your time is more valuable than your computer's time, why spend an extra 30 minutes working with photon mapping or final gather settings even if it saves 30 minutes render time and more often than not it doesn't. That's still 30 minutes not spent modeling, animating, or lighting. Nikon D60 Corey Hilz, 2012-09-10
