

Residential Interventions for Children, Adolescents, and Families

Now more than ever there is a need to ensure that best practices are being used in residential programs. As the focus on costs and outcomes increases, residential programs must clearly demonstrate that the interventions provided are efficient and effective. Readers will learn how to:

- create strength-based, empowering, and healing environments;
- better engage and partner with children, adolescents, and families in meaningful ways;
- support those who have experienced trauma and loss, and prevent and eliminate the use of restraint and seclusion;
- respect and include cultural indices in practices;
- track, measure, implement, improve, and document well-aligned care to deliver promising and best practices, and evidence-informed and evidence-based interventions; and
- track long-term outcomes and create healing strategies to better support sustained positive outcomes.

This book encourages readers to think strategically about how agencies, communities, and systems can identify and implement actions that lead to positive change and work more collaboratively to improve the lives of children, adolescents, and their families who have experienced emotional and behavioral challenges.

Robert M. Wiley, PhD, is a clinical psychologist and chief of the Child, Adolescent, and Family Branch of the National Center for Mental Health Services, National Institutes of Health.
