Rethink Your World Your Future:

Rethink MR Andrew D. Martin, 2015-05-11 What if our assumptions about the future are wrong As we move past overshoot in the use of natural resources humanity is faced with two questions The first being do we continue down the business as usual road or do we rethink our current paradigm and change our trajectory One way will lead to certain collapse The other will give us a better chance of mitigating catastrophic disruptions lead us to greater connection and the ability to rebuild communities and ecosystems and deliver real prosperity to all Rethink Your world Your future explains How our biases and failures in cognitive thinking have been limiting humanity from true progress How modern society has been manipulated into compliance and participating in an unsustainable system of consumption and production How our modern industrialised society is largely responsible for our ecological and social disconnect How government economic and corporate propaganda is hiding the truth and setting us up for major crisis How cheap energy has shaped modern civilisation and how the end of cheap energy is and will continue to have profound implications for modern society Why food production and consumption is key to helping solve many of the world's problems Why new models of food production and distribution that help provide diversity abundance and health benefits are needed What we must do to transition to a new prosperous more resilient world The big picture trends and shifts that will shape modern industrialised economies over the coming decades The three revolutions that will change how we live enabling us to live richer more meaningful lives Rethink Your world Your future Offers people and communities hope and practical strategies and solutions which can help facilitate change and build a more abundant and resilient future
