Data Mining Techniques in Sensor Networks

Annalisa Appice, Anna Ciampi, Fabio Fumarola, Donato Malerba, 2013-09-12 Sensor networks comprise of a number of sensors installed across a spatially distributed network which gather information and periodically feed a central server with the measured data The server monitors the data issues possible alarms and computes fast aggregates As data analysis requests may concern both present and past data the server is forced to store the entire stream But the limited storage capacity of a server may reduce the amount of data stored on the disk One solution is to compute summaries of the data as it arrives and to use these summaries to interpolate the real data This work introduces a recently defined spatio temporal pattern called trend cluster to summarize interpolate and identify anomalies in a sensor network As an example the application of trend cluster discovery to monitor the efficiency of photovoltaic power plants is discussed The work closes with remarks on new possibilities for surveillance enabled by recent developments in sensing technology mining view method discriminates the different requirements by using scale hierarchy and granularity in order to uncover the anisotropy of spatial data mining The Deren Li method performs data preprocessing to prepare it for further knowledge discovery by selecting a weight for iteration in order to clean the observed spatial data as much as possible In addition to the essential algorithms and techniques the book provides application examples of spatial data mining in geographic information science and remote sensing The practical projects include spatiotemporal video data mining for protecting public security serial image mining on nighttime lights for assessing the severity of the Syrian Crisis and the applications in the government project the Belt and Road Initiatives
