Transformative Policy for Poor Women Bina Fernandez, 2016-02-24 What accounts for the oft noted gap between well designed policies for women and their inadequate implementation Why do such policies often fail to benefit the poorest women How do policies address the intersecting inequalities of gender class caste ethnic identity and race What are the conditions under which policy may have transformative potential for poor women This book answers these questions and many more Presenting a new feminist framework for policy analysis that can account for policy failures Bina Fernandez argues that these failures are often predictable and that it is necessary to unpack the actual policy practices within the policy implementation gap Recognising that policy is a multiply layered contingent and politically contested discursive process the author proposes the analysis of policy through four analytical categories Constitutive Contexts Representations Practices and Consequences Within each of these four categories gender class and ethnic identity are central axes of analysis The framework is given substance through an empirical case study of an anti poverty policy in India yet the wider relevance of the framework is validated through a discussion of parallels in the policy contexts of other developing countries Transformative Policy for Poor Women provides an important and required framework to understand the gap between policy pronouncement and its praxis on the ground These features make this book an important read for both scholars and practitioners seeking to understand policy in developing country contexts
