This collection of papers on the flamingos was one of the earliest Poyser monographs An international gathering of scientists from a variety of disciplines met at The Wildfowl Trust Slimbridge from 10 12 July 1973 to report on the world situation in the wild and in captivity of the six types of flamingos The occasion was the International Flamingo Symposium called to discuss problems encountered in flamingo conservation and research and participants came from North and South America Africa the Middle East and Europe Flamingos thirty nine chapters derive from papers delivered at the Symposium They form four sections Populations Ecology and Conservation Flamingos in captivity Ethology and Taxonomy Flamingo Physiology in addition there are appendices of biological and other information a comprehensive bibliography and an Introduction by Sir Peter Scott Flamingos one of the oldest bird groups alive today are also among the most popular and common of zoo animals and part of the book is concerned with the problems of breeding and rearing the birds in captivity and the stress and disease to which they can be prone One of the aims of the Symposium and of the book is to disseminate the knowledge that will help improve captive conditions Hopefully greater success in breeding from captive birds may ensure that fewer of those born to the wild will be deprived of their freedom Sir Peter Scott in his Introduction believes that within ten years zoos should be breeding all the flamingos they need Approximately half of the book is concerned with populations in the wild with field studies and conservation and there are reports from all but one of the major population areas Jacket illustration by Ian Willis
