An organism's phenotype is the observable characteristics of an organism. It is the result of the interaction of the organism's genotype (the genetic code) and the environment. The genotype is the genetic code that determines the organism's phenotype.

Development

Development is the process by which an organism grows and changes from a single-celled zygote into a multicellular organism. It involves the differentiation of cells into specialized tissues and organs. The process of development is controlled by a complex system of genes and proteins.

Environmental influences

Environmental influences can affect an organism's phenotype. For example, a plant's growth and development can be affected by factors such as light, water, and nutrients. The environment can also affect an organism's behavior and physiology.

Genetic inheritance

Genetic inheritance is the process by which an organism's genetic information is passed on to its offspring. It involves the transmission of chromosomes and the genes they contain.
