

Chapter 15, The Presidency

As noted by Richard Neustadt, presidential power is the power to persuade, not the power to command. Therefore, it is the job of the president to get people to do what they would normally not do.

The Presidency

The presidency is an executive department of the president's job description, the power of his appointment, and the bureaucracy he creates. Besides the institutions, the president's personality often makes a difference.

Woodrow Wilson was a new president when office, his close advisors had to bring up to the organization and the American people.

The Wilson Model: the American people used a presidential system after the great...
Federalism, Jefferson, Lincoln, Wilson, etc.

The Wilson Model: the American people did not want a presidential system...
In fact, American political culture tends to distrust strong leadership and authority, favoring limited government in its place.

Neustadt's argument of the presidential system was regarding political power.
Americans still hold the president in great high expectations.

The Wilson Model: the constitution states that the president must be a natural born citizen, 35 years of age, who has resided in the US for at least 14 years.

Since the Wilson Model, the office has been occupied by politicians, war leaders, scholars, and...
The Wilson Model: the president is elected by the people, and serves a 4-year term.

The Wilson Model: the president is elected by the people, and serves a 4-year term.

The Wilson Model: the president is elected by the people, and serves a 4-year term.

Although a diversity of men (and women) have held the office of the presidency, no matter in...
