implementation of row planting has important consequences for inter and intra household labor allocation with relatively more use of non family labor The adoption of row planting was further found not to be profitable for farmers in the first year of the promotion campaign seemingly explaining the limited success in up scaling the adoption of the technology by farmers in the second year of the program

Data and Research to Improve the U.S. Food Availability System and Estimates of Food Loss National Research Council, Institute of Medicine, Food and Nutrition Board, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Committee on National Statistics, 2015-01-02

The United States Department of Agriculture's USDA's Economic Research Service's ERS Food Availability Data System includes three distinct but related data series on food and nutrient availability for consumption The data serve as popular proxies for actual consumption at the national level for over 200 commodities e.g. fresh spinach, beef and eggs The core Food Availability (FA) data series provides data on the amount of food available per capita for human consumption in the United States with data back to 1909 for many commodities The Loss Adjusted Food Availability (LAFA) data series is derived from the FA data series by adjusting for food spoilage, plate waste and other losses to more closely approximate actual intake The LAFA data provide daily estimates of the per capita availability amounts adjusted for loss e.g. in pounds, ounces, grams and gallons as appropriate, calories and food pattern equivalents i.e. servings of the five major food groups: fruit, vegetables, grains, meat and dairy available for consumption plus the amounts of added sugars and sweeteners and added fats and oils available for consumption

This fiscal year as part of its initiative to systematically review all of its major data series ERS decided to review the FADS data system One of the goals of this review is to advance the knowledge and understanding of the measurement and technical aspects of the data supporting FADS so the data can be maintained and improved

Data and Research to Improve the U.S. Food Availability System and Estimates of Food Loss is the summary of a workshop convened by the Committee on National Statistics of the National Research Council and the Food and Nutrition Board of the Institute of Medicine to advance knowledge and understanding of the measurement and technical aspects of the data supporting the LAFA data series so that these data series and subsequent food availability and food loss estimates can be maintained and improved The workshop considered such issues as the effects of termination of selected Census Bureau and USDA data series on estimates for affected food groups and commodities, the potential for using other data sources such as scanner data to improve estimates of food availability and possible ways to improve the data on food loss at the farm and retail levels and at restaurants This report considers knowledge gaps, data sources that may be available or could be generated to fill gaps, what can be learned from other countries and international organizations, ways to ensure consistency of treatment of commodities across series and the most promising opportunities for new data for the various food availability series

Improving diets through food systems in low- and middle-income countries: Metrics for analysis Melesse, Mequanint B., Van den berg, Marrit, Béné, Christophe, Brouwer, Inge D., de Brauw, Alan, Taking a food systems approach is a promising strategy for improving diets Implementing such an approach would require the use of a comprehensive set of metrics to characterize food systems set meaningful goals track food systems performance and evaluate the impacts of food systems interventions Food systems metrics are also useful to structure debates and communicate to policy makers and the general public This paper provides an updated analytical framework of food systems and uses this to systematically identify relevant metrics and indicators based on data availability in low and middle income countries LMICs The list of indicators partly overlaps with the Sustainable Development Goals SDG indicators but these do not cover all aspects of the food system We conclude that public data are relatively available on food systems drivers and outcomes and on some but not all of the activities With only minor additional investments existing surveys could be extended to cove
